- Gold in $1,600 Territory As U.S. Bond Yields, Dollar Spike Again
- Oil Mixed, OPEC+ Decision Shockwaves Continue
- Copper, Nickel Extend Plunge With Federal Reserve Standing Pat

Precious metals

The resolve of the gold bull is facing an all-new test with prices of the yellow metal breaking below $1,700 an ounce for a second day in a row after remarks on the U.S. economy by Federal Reserve Chairman Jay Powell sent bond yields and the dollar soaring. Gold futures on New York's Comex snapped below $1,700 on Wednesday, the first time since April last year, and were back below those levels after Thursday's official session on the exchange. The spot price of gold, which reflects real-time trades in bullion, hit $1,600 territory the first time since June on Thursday.

NYMEX Oil

Oil was mixed Friday morning in Asia, with investors digesting the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries and its allies (OPEC+) 's decision to keep supply curbs steady. Brent oil futures inched down 0.19% to $66.84 by 8:52 PM ET (1:52 AM GMT), after hurtling past the $67 mark earlier in the session. WTI Futures were up 0.23% to $63.98, recording its highest close since April 2019. The cartel approved the continuation of current production levels for April at its ministerial meeting on Thursday, going against wide expectations that it would relax the curbs. Meanwhile, Russia and Kazakhstan won exemptions from the curbs.

Base Metals

Copper fell the most since March and nickel extended a slide, accelerating a selloff in industrial metals that a reversed recent weeks of stellar gains. The slump that was sparked in part by a rise in inventories tracked by the London Metal Exchange and easing nickel supply concerns eased was spurred further by rising treasury yields and a strengthening dollar. U.S. Federal Reserve Chairman stopped short of pushing back on a surge in yields, sparking a broad selloff across equities and metals.
