Market summary

- Gold Closes up 1st Time in 5 Days Despite Dollar Power
- Oil Extends Biggest Drop in 3 Months as Demand Worries Escalate
- Copper dips on profit booking

Precious metals

Gold for December delivery on Comex settled New York's regular trading session up $8.90, or 0.5%, at $1,943.20 per ounce. It was the first positive close in five days for the benchmark gold futures contract. Last week, December gold lost $40, or 2%, after an unexpected surge in the dollar that carried through to Tuesday as the euro weakened ahead of this week's European Central Bank meeting.

NYMEX Oil

Oil extended its biggest decline in almost three months as increasing doubts over the strength of a demand recovery and falling equities soured market sentiment. Futures in New York fell 1.2%, after plunging 7.6% on Tuesday as Brent crude settled below $40 a barrel for the first time since June 15. Asia's stalling demand recovery, the end of the U.S. summer-driving season and increased supply from OPEC and its allies signal a bleak short-term outlook for oil prices. Both benchmarks are trading in a pattern known as contango, where the most immediate prices are far below those for supply contracts in later months.

.Metals .

Copper prices fell on Tuesday as stock market and oil prices dived and the dollar strengthened, but prices remained near 2 year high as LME inventories hit 15 year low and speculators bet on a further rally.
