

Weekly Technical Outlook and Picks

- Nifty started the week with a gap-down opening and remained highly volatile amid escalating US–Iran tensions, closing at 22,713, down 107 points for the week.
- On the weekly chart, the index formed a Spinning Top candlestick, indicating indecision near the medium-term upward-sloping trendline in place since Jun'24.
- For bulls to regain control, the index needs to decisively cross and sustain above 23,000, which aligns with the upper band of the falling channel (since 26th February), opening upside potential toward 23,300–23,600.
- On the downside, a break below 22,500 could intensify selling pressure, dragging the index toward 22,200–22,000 levels.
- The weekly RSI remains below its reference line, reflecting a negative bias. However, with RSI nearing oversold levels at 27.7, the probability of a technical pullback increases, provided the index holds the trendline support and manages a close above 23,000.
- Overall, the index remains at a critical juncture, where holding key supports could trigger a relief rally, while a breakdown may extend the ongoing correction.

- On the weekly chart, it formed a Doji candlestick pattern, indicating indecision among market participants at current levels.
- Technically, a decisive move above 51,750 could trigger fresh buying momentum, pushing the index toward the 52,250–53,000 zone.
- Conversely, a break below 51,000 may intensify selling pressure, dragging the index toward the 50,600–50,000 levels.
- The weekly RSI remains in negative territory and below its reference line, reinforcing the cautious outlook and underlying weakness.
- While the RSI is nearing oversold levels, suggesting possible exhaustion in the downtrend, a meaningful reversal would require a decisive move above the reference line, supported by positive price action to confirm a shift in momentum.
